Investigators Warn Housewives Heavy Buying Will Force Up Prices.

BURDEN WILL FALL ON POORER CLASS

Report Will Also Dwell on Need of Terminal Facilities of Open Markets.

The executive committee of the Mayor's Committee on Food Supply will make its preliminary report this week to Acting Mayor McAdams. The report shows four prime factors in the advance in food prices. They are: The present and anticipated foreign demand for our domestic foodstuffs for future shipment.

Heavy buying of household supplies by housewives against future needs. Holding back by the producer. Stocking up by local storekeepers and large storekeepers. The latter class having made unusually heavy demands on the producers and wholesalers throughout the country.

Food Embargo Discussed. An embargo is pointed out, would mean paying European debts in food instead of in money. The report also discusses the possibility of a food embargo.

Studies Drain by Export. As to the export drain and the cutting off of imports, the only remedy the committee sees is to encourage the establishment of new industries to supply demand and fill out own wants.

Three Weapons Proposed. Three important weapons against high prices are named, as follows: "Substitute foods, by which we do not mean adulterated foods, but foods that are nutritious and strengthening that heretofore have not been generally used for our people."

The packing companies admit, said District Attorney Whitman, "that they increased prices during certain weeks in August, but they state by the testimony of their several representatives that such increase in prices was the result of a decrease in the supply of cattle, hogs, sheep, lambs, etc., on the hoof offered for sale in the great live stock markets or stockyard centers of the United West."

Prices All the Same. Butchers who had bought from the several packing companies agreed that the only reason they had for not raising their prices was that the market was so glutted with meat that they were unable to do so.
